God's Crime Scene: A Cold-Case Detective Examines the Evidence for a Divinely Created Universe (Pages 47-67)

The foundational, regional and locational conditions of our universe, solar system and planet are _____ and _____. The slightest modification of these conditions would be disastrous for life. (Page 51)

The multiverse lacks evidential support. Scientists can't _____ other universes in the multiverse to corroborate their claims. Worse yet, such explanations fail to logically eliminate the need for _____. If there is a multiverse-generating mechanism, it would certainly have to be calibrated in such a way to make the generation of a life-permitting universe possible. (Page 65)

The fine-tuning of the universe implies _____ and _____. (Page 67)

Case Making Course Session 05 (Investigating God) - Evidence for God from the Fine-Tuning of the Universe

All of these conditions have to be _____ so that this ship ends up in a world where life can emerge. This overwhelming fine-tuning in which all of the fine-tuned _____ are even connected strikes scientists as difficult to describe.

The only way to explain the fine-tuning is either through:

_____ - This is not an explanation. What they are really saying is "I don't know what led to this, but given enough time, it could happen." It ignores the long odds.

_____ - But the universe could have been different. There is no evidence for this. This is confusing observations with _____.

_____ - The controversy in science about this theory is dramatic because it lacks the kind of evidence scientists typically use to formulate theories. It would still require a level of _____.
