Cold-Case Christianity: A Homicide Detective Investigates the Claims of the Gospels (Pages 25-32 and 53-56)

If there is an answer to be discovered, _____ _____ dictates that we must find it by examining the relationship between material objects and natural forces; that's it, nothing more.
Supernatural forces are excluded by definition. Most scientists begin with this _____ and fail to consider any answer that is not strictly physical, material, or natural. Even when a particular phenomenon cannot be explained by any natural, material process or set of forces, the vast majority of scientists will refuse to consider a _____ explanation. (Page 27)

The question is not whether or not we have ideas, opinions, or preexisting points of view; the question is whether or not we will allow these perspectives to prevent us from examining the evidence _____.
It's possible to have a prior opinion yet leave this presupposition at the door in order to examine the evidence _____. (Page 30)

If we approach the issue of the resurrection in an _____ (without the presuppositions described in the previous chapter) and assess it as we evaluated the dead-body scene, we can judge the possible explanations and eliminate those that are unreasonable. The conclusion that Jesus was resurrected (as reported in the Gospels) can be sensibly inferred from the available evidence. The resurrection is _____. (Page 55)
